The Legacy of Babelsberg

Movie-making dreams have come true in Babelsberg since 1911. This historic location has hosted numerous renowned movie productions under the signet of UFA (Universal Film Agency) and DEFA (German Film Agency). Their legacy of national and international production excellence has continued for over 100 years. Today, Germany's largest studio complex hosts Hollywood Blockbusters, feature films and daily soaps. Marlene Dietrich, one of UFA's most successful and celebrated actresses became world-famous in Babelsberg with her debut in "The Blue Angel". Fritz Lang made movie history with his milestone film "Metropolis" — all these movie icons loved the charm and flair of Babelsberg. During the DEFA era, Babelsberg hosted GDR movie classics like the fairy tale adventure "Little Mook" featuring exotic costumes. Gojko Mitić started his career as the "Native American in charge" during the productions of several Western themed movies like "Chingachgook".

Grundy UFA, the production company of Germany's most successful daily soap, "Good Times Bad Times" (Gute Zeiten, Schlechte Zeiten, GZSZ) hosts daily productions of new episodes for RTL television. Throughout the last years, the Media City has hosted many award winning productions, among them "The Pianist" featuring Adrien Brody, directed by Roman Polanski, who won a Golden Palm for his outstanding movie works. "The Reader" featuring Kate Winslet and Ralph Fiennes, produced by Stephen Daldry, followed this path of fame. Quentin Tarantino's "Inglourious Basterds" starring Brad Pitt, Diane Kruger and Christoph Waltz also made movie-history. In late 2011, "The Three Musketeers in 3D" directed by action-movie-specialist Paul W. Anderson proudly featured Orlando Bloom, Milla Jovovich and Christoph Waltz. Literary masterpiece "The Cloud Atlas", featuring Tom Hanks, Halle Berry and Susan Sarandon, was also produced on-site under the direction of Tom Tykwer and The Wachowskys (known through their movie milestones "The Matrix"). In early 2013, director and actor George Clooney is using Babelsberg for his star-casted movie "The Monuments Men" in which he is going to play the leading role. Hollywood icons like Matt Damon, Daniel Craig and Cate Blanchett are going to round off the production's star cast. Today, Babelsberg is synonymous for media innovation excellence and creativity and represents a modern Media City consisting of more than 130 companies and over 2,500 freelance and permanent employees. Located in close proximity to the German capital Berlin, Babelsberg continues to draw movie stars from all over the world. The Media City is also one of the largest local employers offering opportunities in the areas of traditional movie and TV crafts and modern technologies. The "Rundfunk Berlin Brandenburg" (Broadcasting Berlin Brandenburg) as well as the University for Film and TV "Konrad Wolf", offer fantastic training grounds for aspiring filmmakers. The Filmorchestra Babelsberg also belongs to the vibrant business center.
